Dear Sir or Madam,

I am writing to you to appeal the decision to label my animal Bandit Bendlin as a "dangerous dog" and given another chance please. I fully acknowledge the harm he caused in that unprecedented moment and apologize deeply on his behalf. I am committed to an incident like that never occurring again. Bandit is currently still a puppy and has a lot of energy and at times fearful. However, he is still very much a family dog and is around women and children often and does well in the home and in smaller social settings. In that one time incident, he was in a playful high energy state and was thrown off guard when the woman wanted to pet him but appeared to get afraid and mistakenly put her hand on him to hold him down. He had an uncharacteristic reaction that day. I am committed to correcting my animal's behavior by continuing to socialize him in structured settings with all different people, including women and children. He is muzzled when outdoors and will not petted by strangers at this time until his dog training courses are complete. I plan to put my animal in dog training courses soon. Once again, I am requesting please, that you reconsider labeling Bandit as a dangerous dog.

Thank you for your time and consideration.

Respectfully,

Fabian Bendlin
